As a result of the reforms carried out in the education system of our country, today positive results are visible in the quality of education and the efficiency of students' learning. After all, our wise people say that the knowledge acquired in youth is a pattern carved in stone. The fact that our young people are winning international science Olympiads and knowledge competitions indicates that the work being done in the field of development is on the right track. Teaching foreign languages to children in depth has become the need of the hour today. Of course, you know that as a result of learning foreign languages, your communicative abilities will expand, your chances of getting a more prestigious job will increase, and you will be able to watch and read movies and books in the original language. But there are other aspects of learning new languages that you may not be aware of.

Life in the modern world implies constant self-improvement and reaching new heights. For many of us, self-education becomes an important priority, and knowledge of foreign languages ensures success in career, creativity, personal life, etc. However, often over time, the desire to learn wanes, goals seem unattainable, and the language becomes overwhelmingly difficult. At such times, it is important not to give up, but to reconsider your goals and opportunities, because the right motivation plays an important role in learning English, both for beginners and those with basic knowledge. Purposeful learning is possible only when there is motivation - a conscious desire to achieve a specific goal. By motivating yourself to learn English, you start the learning mechanism and create a positive emotional background that contributes to effective activity. Whether you want to learn English for travel, career advancement or communication with foreigners, you should immediately adjust yourself to an effective process.

To increase interest in learning English, you need to use different emotions. Positive motivation refers to the corresponding emotions - imagine how confidently you speak with foreigners, successfully negotiate, etc. By drawing this picture in your head, you can visualize your goal and understand how important it is not to delay learning. Negative motivation to learn English causes negative feelings and anxiety. Just imagine how ridiculous you'll look when you're in a foreign country and don't speak English well enough.

Although concern about your future happiness can be a strong reason to work harder and harder, ideally it is desirable to combine positive and negative motivation. The only thing to avoid is antimotivation - the burden of negative emotions associated with learning English. If you have experienced failures, ridicule, conflicts in the past, as a result of which you constantly hate the language, you need to overcome this situation and convince yourself that you really need English.
